

Innis Herald
'68-'69
Volume 4
Issue 5

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2015

<https://archive.org/details/innisherald019uoft>

WANTED !!

Ron "el Editoro" Pushchak, height - 6 feet, weight incalculable, male white; hair, eyes, brain-brown. M. O. Known to take up a pen in the right hand and write smut and/or sarcasm. Known to insult or abuse all conventions of the ethical press. Two armed and dangerous.

Clare "little red headed girl" Booker. Height-around three feet. Weight-undivulged, female, technicolour (depends what season) M.O. ruins typewriters by sticking her pudgy fingers between the keys and bending them. She has a pink body and a year and a half left.

Norrie "serf" Wilson, height-6 feet 2 inches, weight-negligible, colour-pale, male. M.O. does absolutely nothing but say "yeah Ron" He is not, I repeat, not dangerous.

Editorial

In the past, the editorial section of the Herald has been harsh in its criticisms of the student government of Innis, mainly because the criticisms were justified. But, in light of the recent noon meeting at which the student government proposed disbanding itself in favour of non-party representation of students (not subject to recall of their constituents) sitting on the Innis College Council, the Editorial staff of the Herald felt the time due to give our student government a vote of thanks. For proposing a government structure whereby any student-administration dispute calling for a decision along these lines is a foregone conclusion in favour of the administration, thank you. For negating the pride in self achievement and purpose in student government, thank you. And for putting Innis College on the level of the student governments of the highschools of Ontario, thank you.....for nothing.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Sir:

As a concientious observer of the University Milieu I feel that the time has come to speak out on behalf of those students on this campus who have in the past, and are now, accused of apathy. This is, to begin with, a misnomer. "Apathy" about student-administration "conflict", involvement of the University in off-campus community actions etc. ad infinitum isn't truly apathy but a personal moral evaluation of such questions as trivial. The effect that the University experience has on the life of the individual is still (though some would have us believe otherwise) primarily achieved through the medium of the academy. The question of apathy then boils down to a basic assessment of the values which a student brings into the university environment.

The primary source of student activists on campus is found in courses which have no immediate bearing on occupations beyond the university walls ie. in the "Real" world. The least politically active and restive elements on our campus are found in courses which have an explicit goal, that prepare the individual for life beyond the confines of our precious community of scholars, eg. Engineering, Dentistry and Medicine. The historically stable structure and temperament of those individuals stems from the fact that they have the maturity to make a decision as to goals and eventual career. The other less settled group is such primarily because of their lack of maturity. The expression of such immaturity is found in demonstration and other overt forms of youthful misdirection. Lack of patience and the unpreparedness of student governments, comprised mostly of these kinds of students, to share are now demanding has been proven time and again - most recently at ST. George. (A classic example of a child's temper tantrum.)

It is interesting to note that those who most strongly accuse us of apathy are those among us who, themselves, have the least sense of direction.

Anon

We're small but we try harder

ROBBIE MACFADDEN

....They'll be shaking in Tarheel tonight. Innis College, super centre on campus, has just introduced a revolutionary new concept in student "exchanges". Gone are the days when exchanges were just between various universities in different parts of the country. Through the extensive applications of sociological and psychological theory, Innis has formulated a brilliant new concept for all future exchanges.

Exchanges from now on will be "inter-college oriented" (to quote one of our imminent psychologists). Instead of going out of the province or out of the country, future exchangers will go out of the building into our other satellite campus. To be more specific exchangers from Innis I will travel to Innis II and vice versa. Think of the benefits that could be incurred! Ideas would be exchanged and friendships made for life. In an atmosphere where everyone would feel comfortable and "at home", great progress would be made towards inter-college understanding. Maybe everyone would even get to know the principal's name. All-in-all, the most favourable comment heard on the subject, came from a member of the Student Treasurer's office who said, "I'm for it. It's probably the only type of exchange we could afford anyway."

INNIS HERALD

Vol. 4 Issue No. 5

EDITOR....Ron Pushchak
TYPIST....Clare Booker
STOOGES....Norrie Wilson

Confucius say: Man who keep money in jock strap have finances all balled up.

CO-OPTION

by CLARE BOOKER

Innis College is forgoing ahead once more, pioneering the field of co-option. Two years ago when representation on faculty council was the big issue, the I.C.S.S. Executive fought until it got 5 representatives on the College Council. "Student representation, or strike"; we were a force to be dealt with and we meant business. We wanted a voice, however, small in the control of the college and we got it for better or worse. Mostly worse because without realizing it the students had forced the College Council to co-opt them by only insisting on 20% representation. We wanted a foothold, however small and we took it and thanked them. What a perfect position to be in; we had representation and therefore had to stop complaining; the administration looked benificent by allowing our demands yet knew all along that they would still have the ultimate control due to numbers. We screwed ourselves. Other colleges and universities followed in our noble footsteps though and came for advice on tactics, but as the realization came slowly most pulled out before the dastardly deed was fait accompli. Others learned from our mistakes, but did we? Good heavens no. We're still in there asking for more.

Fortunately, or then again maybe unfortunately, Innis College has been (blessed, unblessed - choose one only) by a liberal administration. It has been due only to this administration that the college has appeared on the surface to have moved forward at all this year in the fields of education and residence. But not all the blame can be put on the ICSS Executive for they have had to deal with a new brand of administrator, liberal administrators, who seem all peaches and cream. The student society has not been able to gain a foothold at all this year, they have been foiled again and again by a college council who thinks all our ideas are great and throw their support ahead of us. Ahead of us, for in this way they still have control of the ball game. The Student Society expresses an interest in co-op residences and the council is in there resting space from the university for co-op residences. But whose ideas of co-op residences are implemented - the council's - they ask what we don't want, but not what we do. The council also set up a new experimental program that will be accredited in the fall and an accepted part of the arts and science program. What can the Executive say? On the surface, it looks great, but because the program was so efficiently implemented, the council neatly side-stepped any efforts that might have been made to look into the very basics of education, its beginnings, purposes and ends; an effort that could have upset the university's apple cart. But now Innis 191, 192, 193, 194, are physical entities and we have an enlightened administration who know what we want, bless their little hearts.

How subtle the council has been this year and we ate it up. And now the final coup for which the administrators definitely receive game point. The Executive have been so completely duped that they no longer feel the need for a separate student society but instead propose to negate their responsibility and hand over what little independence they might have had, to the College Council. They don't even feel the need for equal representation since the College Council and the Executive are running on parallel paths (ref: Sue Stoess). Are we running parallel? Should we be? Surely we still need a student society to represent the students as a cohesive group. A society that can go off on its own tangent and doesn't have to toe the line of a middle class society. Would we ever have had an orientation in 1967 if the ICSS hadn't been a separate independent body? No, because the administration severed all connection until the end of the week when its success was realized.

What happens with no independent student society and only representation on council? The administration takes over once more. The wheel will have gone full circle. Sure we'll still have our nice liberal administration and they'll probably continue making changes so that the university looks different and progressive but will they ever get to the real problems, the fundamentals of education and society?

Don't kid yourself baby, they're there to preserve the status quo and you've just been co-opted.

Downstairs Music Department

THE ALTER EGO

„they play good stuff, like they pick their numbers well. You know like Macarthur park Hey Joe, the stuff we want to hear.” Comments from patrons of Brownings, the new Disco on Bay St. above Wellesley. They're talking about the Altar Ego, a rock-blues band that has been making many events happen better around campus. Those patrons lay out quite a bit of cash to become members of the place so they know the music they like and the kind they want to hear. The Altar Ego is their answer. The pieces they play are well polished and smooth, their sensitivity to their audience produces a better choice of playing the right piece at the right time. Rick Love (a sure put on if I ever heard one. It was probably dumbrowski or something) is the man on drums and he puts his talents to use with good and forceful skin-work in the difficult parts of the pieces when the rest of the group is in transition from one part of the Kieth Richardson, the organist, handles his machine, not so much in the wailing solo style of the Creame or the Deep Purple, but in the wellrounded, filling style of the new era. Bob Read plays bass. It isn't the foreground type of bass that puts a dominant heavy sound on the music output, but you always know there's bass in it. It's there but blended. John Pullam, is lead and lets you know it with his strong voice and powerful guitar. The whole effect is one of entertainment, pure and not so simple. John C. Morris (the agent) tells me that this group is his top potato action and that they never have any trouble getting bookings. "The only thing the boys want" says J.C. "Is audiences that feel their moods and like the stuff they play so they can let loose."

THE SKY DIVING PICTURE

by RALPH GRAY

Did you ever dive from a high diving tower? Did you ever drive a good machine at full throttle down a winding highway? Why? You probably did it because it was fun. Today driving enthusiasts are adding to the fun by incorporating the thrill of aircraft flying with the practice of actually gliding one's own body through the air, doing controlled turns, loops, dives and barrelrolls. With several jumpers, enthusiasts can pass batons, play follow the leader, track-race across country and perform various other stunts. During this time, one's speed ranges from 120 to 160 M.P.H. but the sensation of falling is never felt. For extreme speeds and excitement, sport parachuting beats all others.

After descending to a height of 2500 feet, the parachute is opened and the slow descent to earth begins. At this point, one must steer the parachute to a small target on the landing field. With practice, a person can consistently land within a few feet of the target.

New and modern equipment, better techniques, instruction and supervision have made sport parachuting a safe sport, and one that is growing more popular every day. Many fellows are bringing their girlfriends up to the clubs to share the space-age sport and parachute as a team.

The most frequent objection made to the sport is that of cost. But sky diving is much cheaper than skiing. Your equipment is not lying around idle for half of the year because sport parachuting is a year round activity and eliminates the burden of seasonal investment.

There are many small clubs within a 100 mile radius of Toronto. Most clubs are about 50 miles away so that you can jump for an afternoon, or make it a day or a weekend.

Make plans to become a sport parachutist this summer. Start lessons in the spring and an exciting, fun-filled summer is guaranteed. Meet new people and step up into the space-age sport. If you wish any information concerning this sport please contact Ralph Gray at Innis College, 63 St. George St.

CLASSIFIED ADS

FOR SALE, lend lease or hire - one very slightly used student government executive. This group has had extensive experience in inefficiency, shirking of responsibilities, and time-wasting. Do you have a smooth running student government you wish to disrupt? Call anytime, day or night. Willing to work immediately due to imminent disbanding of the I.C.S.S. executive. Box O Innis Herald

MEMO: To the Artsie Army. MEN: manouvres this week are to disrupt and disband the Innis Herald Newspaper party Saturday. We'll give 'em hell but we'll need tickets to get in. Tickets will be issued by the quartermaster--R. Pushchak, or by Cantina Clare at the P.X. We move out at 2030 hrs. on Saturday night. Gen. DISTURBANCE Cmdr. MACARTHUR PARKS.....eh Bob?
(teehee, teehee.)

CAPTAIN CANADA please come home. The country is in a frightfull mess and the taxes are up again. Trudeau isn't doing anything except hedging and the Universities are up in arms about their courses and their financial aid. Mrs. Silcott is making an ass of the government and we're all in a tither. please come home. Mrs. CANADA.

CHRISTINE Bissell says that Jordan Valley Canadian Claret is slightly harsh, but couldbe good on a picnic with chicken leg

WANTED: one rhythmless triangle player. Purpose: to learn rhythm. Call J. Pope....Vat. 69

DID you know that Tiny Tim was Rosemary's baby?

DESPERATE old man with voice defect desires to meet and make young, nubile babe, Must be versed in the arts and disciplines of love, artificial respiration, and cardiac arrest. When moving I'm really great. Call anytime after tea.
TYRONE F. HORNY Box O Innis Herald